Don't throw away that favorite nylon taffeta petticoat just because it has lost its stiffness. Starch it!

Miss Helen D. Alverson, home management specialist at VPI Agricultural Extension Service, says putting the perkiness gack into nylon taffeta is easy with instant (precooked) cold water laundry starch.

Launder petticoat as usual. Leave it damp for starching. Measure two quarts of cold water into pan large enough for starching. Gradually add 1¼ cups starch, swishing with hand until starch is completely dissolved.

Dip petticoat up and down several times in starch solution, pressing the solution through garment. Do not wring. Fasten dripping skirt by the waisthand to hanger (or line) and let it drip dry. Petticoat will be extremely stiff when dry, but will have a slightly softer finish after ironing.

Iron petticoat with iron set at proper temperature for nylon — "low" if still slightly damp, sponging any dry areas lightly before ironing. With steam iron—if it has a steam setting for synthetics— you may iron after petticoat is dry.

Miss Alverson also lists a few special pointers for petticoat problems.

Nylon net petticoats can be stiffened by the same procedure as nylon taffeta petticoats, except they should be dry completely on the line. Occasionally lift the petticoat, and separate folds so net won't stick together drying. Iron dry.

Excessive stiffness around the waistline can be avoided by not starching the top few inches of your petticoat.

Can-can petticoats are easier to iron if you iron the body of the petticoat on the right side first, then turn skirt wrongside out and iron the ruffles, starting with the top one.

A fan can help prevent the accumulation of odors that add up to mustiness in closets and basements, especially after rainy or humid weather, remind VPI home management specialists.

To help freshen a closet, place a fan on the floor in the doorway, with the fan facing into the closet. If there is a window in the closet, it should be opened so the fan can pull in fresh air directly from outdoors. In any case, the window in the adjoining room should be open, and likewise, the door between room and closet.

In addition to the lawn furniture covers, the cotton terry is also made up as an auto seat topper for summer. These toppers are custom fit for the front seat of any car. Elastic gores and adjustable tapes make it easy to install, and remove.
